teturn of the Steamship City of Sydney With Details of the Arrest of the Mur-derer of C. A. Preller at St. Lou's—The Evidence of H's Guilt In His Trunk.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., June 16 .- The first full report of the voyage and arrest of T. C. D'Augier, alias Walter H. Lennox Maxwell, the murderer of C. Arthur Preller, at St. Louis, was brought by the steamship City of Sydney, which arrived from the Australian colonies early yesterday morning. Maxwell sailed in the D'Augler, and it was soon stated that he was a Colonel in the French army. In the steerage with him were a half dozen young Englishmen, who soon struck up a speaking acquaintance with their fellow-passenger, who struggled with the English language in an awkward French fashion. Before nightfall he was seated with three others at a table playing whist, rolling disparents. Adiables at the seatest and the seatest and the seatest and the playing whist, rolling cigarettes, drinking stout and talking broken English.

MAINTAINING HIS DISGUISE.

He hid behind the French disguise per-fectly. He at no time forgot his mask, and met no one who was willing to carry on a conversation in French. He main-tained his disguise among his com-panions, and excited their admiration by panious, and excited their admiration by his quickness to resent a "gish" at an indifferent play of a card or a reflection upon his knowledge of the game. The gossip of the ship soon said that the French Colonel repelled the slightest insinuations against him with genuine military spirit. Before reaching Honolain the singular passenger had overcome all tary spirit. Before reaching Honolain the singular passenger had overcome all outward signs of anxiety, and joined lightly in all the sports of the ship. He maintained his early acquired reputation for eccentricity by appearing one morning in a full suit of knickerbockers with a cartridge belt about his waist tall a revolver in his hand, which he began to clean, remarking that it had got rusty in his box. It was observed by one on the his box. It was observed by one on the ship that it was singular for a Colonel in ship that it was singular for a Colonel in the French army to be traveling in the steerage, and that it was still more singular that a man so young should have reached so high a rank in an army where promotions are slow, but not a suspicion crossed any mind on shipboard that T. C. D'Augier, the French Colonel in the atterage, was anything else, than he are steerage, was anything else than he pre-tended, or that he was being daily borne forward to a disgraceful end. THE PURSER'S STORY. Purser Comfort, of the City of Sydney who came most in contact with Maxwell, told the following story of the actions of the murderer. He said: "When D'Autrict school officers.

About the time we entered the tropics he put on a knickerbocker suit, with knee breeches and stockings, such tion to the man except as he drew his money the day before we landed. He money the day before we landed. He wasn't demonstrative, and he made no complaints about the food or accommodations. A few hours before we got into Auckland I was much surprised to see the pilot and two police officers board the vessel. They came to my ro m and said they had a warrant for the arrest of one D'Augier for a foul murder committed in St. Louis. Their descripcommitted in St. Louis. Their descrip-tion of the man tallied with the steerage passenger in knickerbockers. I told the officers to stand in the small passageway officers to stand in the small passageway by the door of my room, so that the ac-cused man could not see them. I sent the steward's clerk to call D'Augier. He came along in a minute with a januty air with his hands in his pockets. The two special officers had warned me he was a apecial officers had warred me he was a desperate character and they evidently expected he would open fire on them with a six-shooter, so I didn't think they were sorry to stand outside the door. Well, when I saw the fellow with his bands rehis pockets, I thought he might be going to shoot, but he only smiled good-naturedly and said, in his horrible French-English: "Was ze de matter?" I

On May 5th he was brought into the police court, and the clurges against him read. The Crown Solicitor appeared for the prosecution, and Messrs. Mapier and Burton for the defense. The latter claimed that the court had no jurisdiction, and after some argument the case was remanded to the 7th, after which it was remanded to the 11th.

WHERE DID HE SPEND HIS MONEY? The inference which is drawn here from the fact that Maxwell had only $130 when the fact that Maxwell had only $150 when arrested and spent so little on the ship is, that he ran against a faro bank either here or on the ship and got cleaned out. The fact that he took steerage passage would argue that he had little money before he started. Had he gone in the cibin he could have had his trunk in his started. from the Australian colonies early yesterday merning. Maxwell sailed in the City of Sydney for New Zealand, and was arrested on board of her before she arrived at Aockiand. The officers of the ship give the following account of Maxwell's conduct while on board and of his sudden arrest at the end of the voyage: Among the steerage passengers on the City of Sydney, when she left the San Francisco dock on the 12th of April for Australia, was a man slightly built, with fair hair, closely cut, and a light mustache and imperial. He was apparently alphat thirty-five years old. Amid the bastle and confusion of getting under way he attracted a good deal of attention.

Maxwell's Nervousyess.

As the ship steamed through the channel he paced nervously up and down the forward deck, stopping now and then at the rail to glance at the retreating city. THE DUBIOUS by the Examiner WASHINGTON, June 17.—The board, which examined the "Dolphin" for Secretary Whitney, handed him its report yesterds morning. Captain Belknap, Commander Evans and Mr. Herman Winters do not de-sire another trial trip to satisfy them that the ship is bad. Not one of them believed her to be seaworthy. Even on her first p. m. the train pulled up at the rustic station, and in a few moments the entire party alighted.

A cot has been provided with mattresses and pillows on which to carry the General to the cottage, but it was not used. General Grant stepped from the car, assisted by Colonel Grant, and started to walk with a comparatively firm step, leaning on the arms of Officers John M. Fryer and James Menick. He walked up the inclined walk and into the arbor, where he rested in a chair. After a brief rest, the officers picked up the chair, and carried the invalid to the foot of the steps of the cottage. Here the General motioned to be set down and with his cane in his hand send her ball through the small hamlet of houses that has been built on her deck. One of these houses is called "Social Hall," and this sufficiently indicates the use to which it was intended to be put. The Board recommended its demolition

NO JAUNTS THIS YEAR.

The Steamer Dispatch Tied Up So Far as Junketing Expeditions are Concerned. WASHINGTON, June 17.—People are beginning to move out of Washington. From now until the first of July the on trains from here will be crowded. Generally at this time of the year the officials in the various departments are plauning summer trips at the Government's expense. Nothing of that sort has as yet been developed so far as the departments are cerned. The Dispatch, which has be ployed for a number of summers as a cerned. The Dispatch, which has been employed for a number of summers as a royal yacht for the private use of the President and the Secretary of the Navy, will not be used for private or personal purposes again. There has been some talk of putting her out of commission and selling her. The Secretary of the Navy, however, has had her examined, and he is of the opinion that she can be used to an advantage at some of the South American stations. Her light draught will make her valuable in going uppose of the rivers in this country where some of the rivers in this country wi vessels of our navy are sometimes calle
